Redwood Hill Preserve

Visitors can enjoy a spectacular view of Butterfield Lake from atop the dramatic bluff on the Redwood Hill Preserve.

Densely wooded in a mix of hardwoods and white pines, the Preserve offers the perfect opportunity for bird watchers and nature enthusiasts to get outdoors all year long.

The Redwood Hill Preserve was established in 2014 thanks to the generosity of Elliott and Marjorie Hillback, who donated the 51 acres to provide a place for environmental education and public recreation programs.

Walking trails overlooking Butterfield Lake were created to allow access to this woodland. The Beatrice Rosamond trail is ADA-accessible and traversable by people who use mobility aids. In 2016, the Trilside Learning Center was designed and constructed, and is also wheelchair accessible.

The Trilside Learning Center serves as a focal point for the Indian River Lakes Conservancy's public education programs, including school field trips, a Kids' Nature Camp, a summer speaker series, an annual Water Quality Conference, and several winter events.
